WEDDING DEHYDRATED

(an article on how Turbomasala decided to launch a service making Holiday ornaments out of wedding bouquets).

New ideas usually come to us when they are least expected. Sometimes, during a long hike through Cambodian jungle, sometimes when Nikita is sitting bored at a housewarming party in NYC, and once... during our own wedding! We hand tailored our celebration in 2014 and the main idea behind it was "do it not as "it should be" but as you want it to be". And even though we tried hard to reduce the amount of flowers given to us by guests through promoting donating money to a local charity instead, we ended up having some great plants threatened to be trashed. And, you can't be a proper bride without bride's bouquet, right? So, we were laying on the bed in a hotel room next morning, surrounded by flowers, and I thought: "What if we preserve this beauty in our Orbs? What a great thing to have on our tree for our first Holidays together". Thus, we started a whole new chapter in our Holiday Orbs book where we make bespoke Ornaments out of wedding flowers that brides usually keep dusted somewhere on top of a kitchen drawer or in a closet. Certificates for a set of Orbs out of wedding flowers makes a great gift as couples can again wake up the emotions experienced during one of the most important events. And isn't that what's we're all living for?
